

A CUSTOMER SUCCESS WORK SAMPLE

Implementing Harvey

A CSM's playbook for firm-wide adoption and change management

How I'd take a mid-market firm from signed to fully adopted — a reusable framework, adapted per account across the book.

Alex Donnelly · Mid-Market Customer Success Manager application

Renewal is won by adoption — not at renewal time

The CSM owns a loop. Every turn of it makes the number safer and the account bigger.

My whole focus is the first box. Get a firm to real daily usage and everything downstream — value, renewal, expansion — follows.

Align the three sponsors who decide whether adoption sticks

Adoption fails when it depends on one training session. I align the people who own outcomes, workflows, and learning first.

A 90-day rollout — proof before scale

Start narrow and prove it on real matters, then widen on evidence. The same arc, reused per account.

A firm is not one audience

Role-based enablement, sequenced by frequency and stakes — so confidence rises before complexity does.

Paralegals & staff

High-frequency, clear before/after: document review, summarizing, first-pass research. Fast wins that build trust.

Associates

Drafting, research, and analysis tied to real matters — with the verify-against-source habit built in from day one.

Partners

Strategic value, risk, and client-facing use. Short, high-signal sessions; the confidence to sponsor and to sell it to clients.

Delivery mix: live workshops · self-serve modules · microlearning · office hours · a searchable prompt & use-case library.

Champions turn one-to-one into one-to-many

I can't be high-touch in 40 firms at once. Champions extend the motion; I equip and orchestrate them.

What the champion does

- Localizes Harvey to their group's real matters and terminology.
- Models the workflow and coaches verification discipline peer-to-peer.
- Surfaces stalls and wins early — my early-warning network.
- Carries momentum between my touches.

What I provide, once, for everyone

- Reusable playbooks, prompt libraries, and use-case templates.
- Enablement content and knowledge checks they can run themselves.
- Email cadences and adoption campaigns, productized.
- A scorecard so every account is measured the same way.

Responsible use, built in — because that's what earns daily use

Lawyers adopt a tool they trust. The habits that protect the firm are the same habits that drive confident, repeat use.

Confidentiality first

Clear rules on what goes in, matched to the firm's obligations and client expectations.

Human-in-the-loop

Attorneys own the output. Harvey accelerates the work; judgment and review stay with the lawyer.

Verify against source

Check answers against the record before reliance — rehearsed until it's automatic, not optional.

Know the limits

Coach where Harvey is strong and where it isn't, so trust is calibrated and durable.

The adoption scorecard I'd run every account against

Agreed with the sponsor at kickoff. Baselines and targets shown are illustrative — set per account.

Success isn't software access. It's verifiable, high-stakes legal work getting done in Harvey every day.

Productize the routine — spend judgment where it moves the number

A 40-plus-account book runs on leverage: standardize everything repeatable, reserve high-touch for the moments that matter.

One-to-many, by default

- Reusable onboarding, playbooks, and prompt libraries
- Email cadences and adoption campaigns
- Self-serve modules, office hours, and knowledge checks
- A common health scorecard across the book

High-touch, where it counts

- Value/business reviews with the sponsor
- At-risk saves and stalled-adoption interventions
- Expansion: new groups, seats, and workflows
- Executive relationships and renewals

THE OUTCOME

Adoption that renews itself — and grows

Retention

Value proven every quarter makes renewal a formality, not a negotiation.

Expansion

Proof in one group becomes more seats, more workflows, and net revenue retention past 100%.

Advocacy

Firms that get real value become references — and Harvey's case for the next firm.
